The Aboriginal Protection Act forces many Yugambeh people onto missions and reserves.

Three brothers come to live at what is now known as Brunswick Heads. The brother who came north, Jabreen, teaches the people their language and lore.

The Protector system is dismantled, partly thanks to a strong movement of Aboriginal people advocating for their rights.

The area is proclaimed open for settlement: our anno incursi, year of invasion.

We are still here, living on the jagun of our Ngajanggali (Ancestors), caring for country and teaching mobo jarjum (tomorrow's children).

A penal colony is established at Brisbane, just north of the Yugambeh Nation, with a 50-mile exclusion zone around it.

Yugambeh people establish small villages at Beaudesert, Southport, Hillview, South Tweed and Fingal.

Bromelton is established, among the earliest pastoral stations on the Logan and Albert rivers.

Key words. Anno incursi: year of invasion. Mibunn: Wedge-Tailed Eagle; the Aboriginal people of the Yugambeh Nation. Ngajanggali: Ancestors. Jagun: country.
